ABOUT YOUR HOME

By Frances Dell

Not many home gardeners know that humus or organic matter made from leaves, weeds, grass clippings and different forms of manure and chemical fertilizers do two entirely different things for a garden.

Both types of fertilizers are important because they complement each other. Humus mainly promotes the proper texture of the soil, thus allowing air to come into it, making the soil easier to cultivate. Humus also increases the water-holding capacity of soil and prevents the washing and blowing away of topsoil.

The fundamental reason why most home gardeners are not wise to depend completely upon an all-humus diet for their soil is that, unless they have had their soil tested by experts, they can't be sure what shortages exist in the soil. And, even if they do find out the existing shortage, they can't be sure what their humus or compost heap contains.

Chemical fertilizers, on the other hand, provide the elements for plant growth that are lacking in the soil. Just which ones are needed can easily be discovered by asking the State Agricultural Stations of almost every state.

Of the two types of fertilizers, feeding the soil by chemical means probably will do the most good for the average home gardener. It is very easy to see if soil is hard or lumpy or very sandy — if so, this is very easy to correct by using compost or manure.

Every time a flower is picked or a radish used from a garden a certain amout of phosphorus, potassium, calcium or nitrogen is being removed also. Since these are essential for normal growth in a garden, it is easy to see how necessary it is to replace the reservoir in the soil to keep it from growing steadily poorer.

OLDER THAN HE THOUGHT

Des Moines, Ia.. Phillip E. Martin thought he was 57 years old until he received a letter from his sister, who informed him that he was two years older than she. Her age, she said, was well past 65. Martin investigated and learned he was 69 instead of 57.

Very Accomodating

Tom: "My wife came from a very large family. Did yours?"

Jerry: "No, she brought it with her."

VETERAN TEACHER AT LONGWOOD COLLEGE PLANS RETIREMENT

Farmville, Va., May 16.- If salaries of teachers increase in the next forty years as they did in the past forty years, teachers will make $18,000 a year, according to Miss Nancy Foster who will retire in June after 29 years as a teacher of English at Longwood College and forty years in the teaching profession.

Miss Foster, who taugh in high schools in Mississippi, Texas and Arkansas before coming to Longwood, said that the increase in teachers' salaries is somewhat of an optical illusion because of the decrease in the value of money. Actually, real income of members of college faculties before taxes decreased 5 per cent from 1940 to 1954, while during the same period that of lawyers increased 10 per cent; industrial workers, 48 per cent; and physicians, 80 per cent.

With an ill mother to look after, Miss Foster was not able to take part in many college activities for a long time. However, she was considered an outstanding teacher of grammar, and the final authority on the written word of the English language. For many years she was called on to edit the Longwood Catalog and to serve as advisor on editorial work to the "Virginian," the college yearbook.

Recalling that many changes have taken place in the college in the past quarter of a century, Miss Foster said, "We have always had a good faculty here, but there is a difference in labels. When I began to teach at Longwood in 1927, a Ph. D. on the campus was unusual, but today a person who does not have a Ph. D. is unusual." Miss Foster has an A. B. degree from Mississippi State College and M. A. from the University of Virginia. She has done some work beyond the master level, but said her responsibilities at home prevented her from going on to get a Ph. D.

Miss Foster has served during three administrations' that of Dr. Joseph L. Jarman, president for 44 years; Dr. Dabney S. Lancaster, president from 1946 to 1955, and now president emeritus; and Dr. Francis G. Lankford, Jr., who has been president for less than a year. "I consider all three of them dedicated men," she said.

When asked if the students entering Longwood from the high schools of Virginia are better prepared in English than they used to be, Miss Foster said that they definitely are. She attributed this fact largely to the selective admissions program established by Dr. Lancaster in 1947. Under the program only students in the upper half of the class are admitted to Longwood.

Miss Foster has noticed changes other than in the college, particularly in the countryside around Farmville, where green pastures and forests have replaced many of the tobacco fields. She noted that the changes in Virginia are gradual and therefore not as marked as those in her native Mississippi. Poor communications made that state backward in many ways, she said, but once it started to modernize, it skipped over the interim period and became completely modern with straight roads, scientific and mechanized farms, many new industries, and in the field of educaion, a system of junior colleges throughout the state.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY REACHES SPRING BEAUTY

Luray, Va.- Spring has turned Virginia's Shenandoah National Park into a vast garden of wildflowers.

The colorful blossoms of more than a hundred varieties of flowers and plants form a blanket of beauty over the slopes and valleys of the 190,000 acre Park high in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

The Park was set aside as a national area to preserve such beauty for all Americans and in the 20 years since its dedication it has become one of the East's most popular tourist and vacation areas.

More than a million and a half visitors used the Skyline Drive last year to tour the vast mountain wonderland.

Seventy specially constructed overlooks along the 107-mile Drive provide motorists with sweeping views of the flowering, forested mountain slopes and the rich Shenandoah Valley.

In May the pink azaleas and the white dogwoods brighten the panoramic views from the lofty Drive between Front Royal and Rockfish Gap near Waynesboro. By late May and early June the light pink of the mountain laurel adds color to the scene.

Throughout the summer months, myriad clusters of daisies, sunflowers, black-eyed Susans, goldenrod, violets and wild roses are a vivid trademark of the famed "highway in the sky" that runs along the crest of the Blue Ridge through the Park.

The Park is conveniently located within a few hours drive of the major population centers. It's within one day range of New York City, Cleveland, or Charleston, S. C. It's 75 miles from Washington, 138 from Harrisburg, Pa., and 218 miles from Pittsburgh.

Vacationists and tourists to the Park and the Skyline Drive will find comfortable, modern accomodations including overnight lodges and cabins, fine dining rooms and automobile service stations. Big Meadows Lodge, a famous hotel on the crest of the mountains, opened on March 30, and Skyland, the Park's resort area, opens May 25. Convenient waysides, featuring light meals and gifts, operate throughout the season.

The boy who weighs 196 pounds and made a record as a high school player will be welcome at almost any college, even if he is a little dumb. .Indianapolis News.

Father Darkleaf

By c. h. r.

Brother J. S. Jenkins came in to see me that he came to Appomattox in 1946 instead of 1941, as reported in last week's issue of the paper. Anyway, it was a good day to go to Appomattox, when he moved here from Crewe.

We came across a clipping showing the modes of Father Flannagan's Boys Town, the world-famous home for boys, at Boys Town, Nebraska. Above the wording, is a picture of a young lad carrying a crippled little boy in his arms. The caption underneath, says: "He ain't my brother." Father. He's my brother." What a wonderful thought!

We noted several items among the local county correspondence" of school patrons playing to the teacher. This used to be a widespread practice, at the end of the school term. The parents felt a display of their appreciation for the countless services rendered by the teacher. The kids had struggled with Little Women and Little Susie all year and merited some special recognition. We think well of the idea.

I have many hobbies, but I have indeed any interest in old China. However, I was interested to note in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Magazine telling what a unique thing it was to have a sanitary container out which to eat. Perhaps I should be right off, that there are many people who collect old China. In fact, we have a number of examples in the above-mentioned article it is stated that at least a few years ago the ancient Chinese kept the secret of porcelain and their sanitary dishes from Europe. There was something less than 200 years ago that the English and the problem. Porcelain and its progeny, American-made as atomic bomb. A conception could be thoroughly washed and used again and again was a sort of revolution. The ceramics is fascinating. We take for granted picking up beautiful values in the dime store yesteryear 'twas royalty only that could afford such luxury. Some of the older pieces are worth, and the expert knows how to place values.

New Concern Operates Plant

Lin-Bar Co., operators of a juvenile dress manufacturing plant discontinued its operation in Appomattox, it was announced today. Lin-Bar has operated a plant for approximately two years, on the outskirts of town.

A newly organized firm, "R-H-R ing Co., Inc.," has taken over the operation of the former Lin-Bar plant here, as of May 27.

Of the new company are:

President, Meyer Rappaport; Treasurer, Herbert H. Harrison; Secretary, Ben Ratzan. It was announced that Ben Schamis, former manager here for Lin-Bar, will be manager of the new firm.

It was stated Tuesday by Mr. Rappaport, president, of New York, who had extensive experience in the garment industry, that the new firm anticipates expanding the plant in Appomattox. He pointed to the experience in the industry of his associates, and declared they were well pleased with the industrial potential in Appomattox.

Recreation Program

The summer recreation program will begin on June 18. This coming to all parents are urged to send their children to the playgrounds to the swimming program. A fee of $10 will be charged for all children entering both playgrounds and swimming. A fee of $5 per child will be charged just if your child takes swimming lessons. It has been a good number to sign up so far and the program will be a success. If you haven't signed up for it, please do so as soon as possible. Coach Gordon Bragg will direct the program.
